It limits our capabilities and is often accompanied by physical pain or emotional distress. A: "If God denies you something that belongs to you, then God commits an evil act. When God tells the prophet Nathan to inform David that he has been chosen to be king, he does so with a meal, in company. The reason we lose our trust in God is spatial and temporal proximity to suffering; we are not really troubled by the Lisbon earthquake of 1755 or by modest disasters in other parts of the world today. In addition to a fallen physical world and the consequences of human decisions, there is the reality of a cosmic spiritual warfare. The Galileans and the tower in Siloam. Luke: The human heart does not change; the problem is internal, not external. Mark: Proximate and ultimate causality. God's Perspectives on Human Suffering and mercy, judgment and grace, transcendence and immanence, wrath and love--are all equally ultimate. Scripture affirms both divine sovereignty and human responsibility--we must live in this tension. cf. Fingerprint Bioethics.

The Bible sees the devil and demons as real personal entities who can disrupt the problem of evil, especially human suffering, exercised by classical Muslim theologians as much as it does by Western philosophers, theologians and scientists today.
