Reparations, victims, and trauma in the wake of the Holocaust. Use higher than 29x, magnification! InfovekProjekt The results of the field research show that the different African governments, which are marked by their precolonial histories and by the various colonial and postcolonial ideologies, have developed very distinctive ways of dealing with cultural goods in the countries under study Cameroon and Mali. However, legislators need not look on this phenomenon as a crisis, but as an opportunity to organise the resulting diversity to the greatest benefit for society. Through such open discussions and later, rough and tumble debates, the wheat will be separated from any chaff, and the roads to monetary and economic reform will become ever more clear.
